CAROLINE STOKES: STORYBOARD

Sarah continues to go shopping every weekend, while she is in college, for new clothes and her parents are getting tired of her constantly asking for more money.

Sarah's parents suggests to her to that if they continue to send her more money, she needs to prioritize and manage her spending so she can learn her lesson of being in the "real world".

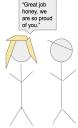

Sarah's friend, Tyler, shows her this new app he got that helps him manage how much he can spend for fun versus the amount he needs to save for important things.

"Now I have money for shopping and for groceries!"

Sarah downloads the app, and quickly picks up the idea of saving money instead of spending it all at once because she realizes that without her parents, she would be struggling financially.

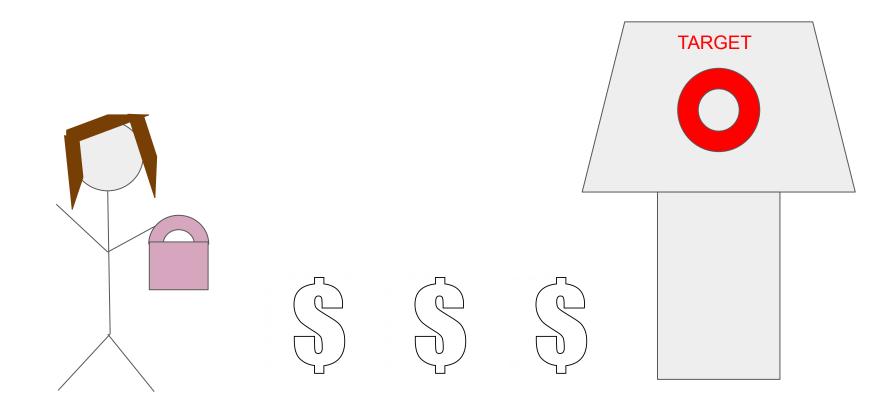

Sarah calls her parents a few weeks later to tell them that she has her priorities in line and they rewarded her by sending her money again, but they shorten the amount so she continues to save.

"Everyone should go use this app!"

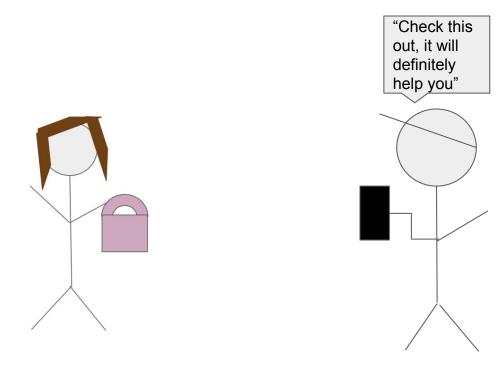

Everyone is happy and Sarah continued to use the app and was successful with her spending from there on out and she suggested the app to her other friends so they could learn too! THE END:)

Even with her husband working a steady job, she knows that they will need to be incredibly careful with their finances, and they both download our budgeting app.

After downloading the app, Daniel and Mary connect their joint bank accounts so they can see their expense & revenue reports.

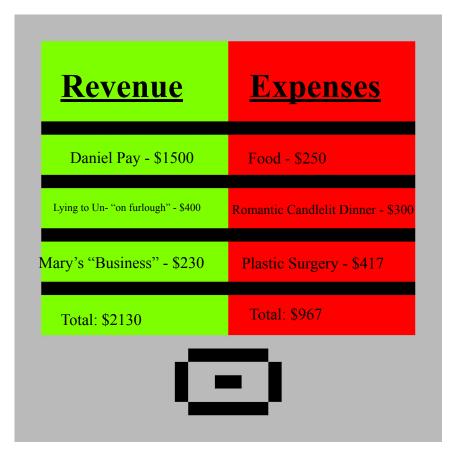

games, or piracy.

They then look to the budgeting app for suggestions.

Goals Monthly income needs to be >$1800. Monthly expenses should be <$1000.

With their suggestions in mind, Daniel and Mary set goals for the next month.

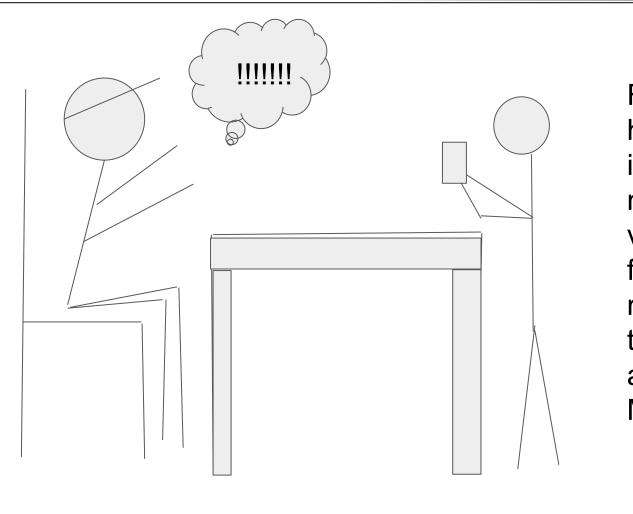

After a month, their budget looks like this. They realize that they've reached their goals for the month, with the help of our app.

They reached their goal, so the app helped them celebrate. Mary's ready for the next month of college, budgeting, and life.

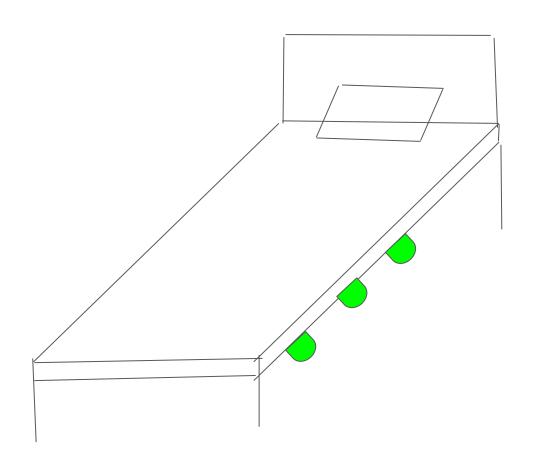

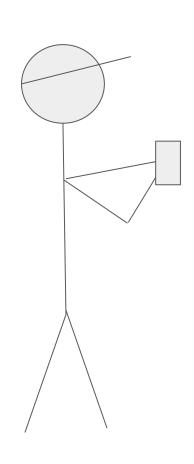

Frustrated about his seeming inability to save money, Rey vents to his friend who recommends the a budgeting app called Easy Money $aver.

Reluctant but desperate, Rey decides he has to give it a try,

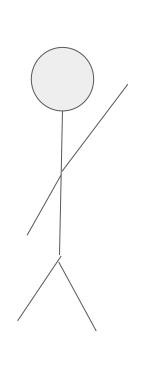

Fearful of greater technology, Rey doesn't put in all of the information and sees steady growth but still struggles to save as much as he'd like.

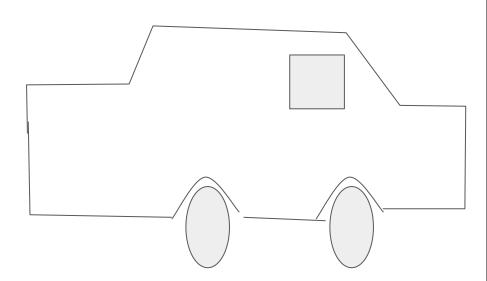

Beginning to see that the app is genuinely helping him save money, Rey puts all of the applicable information in, trusting his friend's recommendation.

Using the app to its full potential, Rey notices he's saving significantly more money and no longer wasting it on unnecessary costs.

Over time, Rey saves enough money to be able to keep the farm going so his son can take over while Rey and his wife retire to the city.
